Sophomores Jules Bernard (left) and Payton Moore should lead L.A. Windward to a standout 2015-16 season. At the recent Pangos All-West Frosh/Soph Camp, Bernard was one of the top overall prospects while Moore was the most consistent performer in terms of playing up to his potential. We took in all the sessions of the 2015 Pangos All-West Frosh/Soph Camp at Cerritos (Calif.) College over the weekend and broke down our notes and evaluations to rank the top fifty players in attendance.

The following rankings are based on evaluations of all 175 campers from all the sessions, not just the two Cream of the Crop All-Star Games. The following rankings are based on performance at the camp only, not on performance combined with previous honors, national or state player rankings. They are also ranked with actual performance in mind, not a player's potential as a college prospect. Some players did not participate in every session of the camp and in some instances that altered the rankings. The camp was extremely deep with regards to second tier players and there were a plethora of candidates deserving of making the bottom 25 (26-50) of this list who did not. There was a drop off in talent after the first 15 or so, but none of the top tier players were completely dominant over their peers. Keep in mind guards tend to dominate showcase settings such as the Pangos Frosh/Soph Camp (s).
