We evaluated each day of the final July NCAA evaluation period in Las Vegas between July 20-24 and broke down our notes to rank the top 60 players we saw between the Las Vegas Fab 48, adidas Uprising Summer Championship and Bigfoot Hoops Las Vegas Classic.

The following rankings are based on evaluations from the three major Las Vegas events that run simultaneously during the third NCAA July evaluation period. The rankings are based on performance, not college potential, or performance combined with previous honors, national or state ranking. The overall level of talent we had an opportunity to evaluate July 20-24 unfortunately was the worst we've seen in Vegas in many years. All three tournaments had high level talent, but play was sporadic and some of the nation's elite players did not complete the tournaments with their respective team, and that further diluted play. With over 2,000 teams and over 20,000 players spread all over town during a five-day period, it's an impossible task to be everywhere at once. These rankings are based on what we saw and obviously would be alot different from another evaluators' list based on which games and which event one focused on at any particular time

Editor's Note: We did not reward highly-regarded players who did not play in the championship rounds, took games off or departed Vegas early for other grassroots events.
